Lentils & Beans / Pulses

- Pulses are part of the legume family, but the term “pulse” refers only to the dried seed. They are dried legumes that grow in a pod of one to twelve seeds.
- Includes beans, lentils, peas and other little seeds referred to as lentils or beans.
- Dal is often translated as “lentils” but actually refers to a split version of a number of lentils, peas, chickpeas, kidney beans and so on. If a pulse is split into half, it is a daal. For example, split Mung beans is Mung daal.
- Indian pulses are usually available in three types: the whole pulse, the split pulse with the skin on, and the split pulse with the skin removed.
- We are proud exporter of different lentils and beans.
